Exercises: The lethal language of tongue-tied immigrants
Exercises by Dr Paul Stapleton and Prof. David Li
1 August, 2013

For those who feel powerless to transform themselves, the gun can be seductive. It provides power. It speaks in a language everybody understands, across colour lines. It opens doors for the invisible into the public space. Unfortunately, it is the language of annihilation and not creation. It speaks up once or twice, but often the user succumbs to his curse: that of silence.

One Goh, 43, an immigrant from Korea who allegedly shot and killed seven people at a school in Oakland, California, is the latest in a string of inarticulate men who became mass murderers in America. Before him, there were Cho Seung-hui, the Virginia Tech shooter, and Jiverly Wong.

Wong, in April of 2009, locked the back exit of a civic community centre in Binghamton, New York, where immigrants had gathered to learn English, and shot 13 people before killing himself.

In 2007, Cho, a 23-year-old English major, shot and killed 32 people at Virginia Tech before killing himself. Cho has since entered modern history as one of the worst mass murderers in the United States.

Frequently answered questions

1. Why I cannot access the full articles?
 - a. You must login and activate your account by filing in the basic information of your profile, before you can have access to the full articles
2. I have read some articles from your paper, but why I cannot find it in the Student Library?
 - a. The Student Library contains selected articles from both South China Morning Post and Young Post only, which cannot be seen as a complete archive. If you wish to read more of our articles, please visit www.scmp.com.
3. Will my answers to the assignments and exercises be seen by everyone?
 - a. No. Only your teacher who assigned these tasks to you will be able to see your answers. If your teacher shares your answers to other teachers and students within your school, then they will also be able to view your answers.
4. Why are my answers to the long question exercises not automatically scored?
 - a. Long question exercises do not come with a pre-set correct answer which is why this type of questions cannot be automatically scored. Your teachers can rate and comment on your answers.
5. I have some comments about the website, who should I contact?
 - a. We welcome all comments and suggestions. Please contact our Customer Relationship Representatives at info@scmp.com, with the subject as "Student Library comments".
6. Can I change the details of my profile or passwords?
 - a. Yes, you can change your personal information and password at any time during the valid period.
