HELMET FITMENT SPECIFICATIONS

HOW TO PROPERLY FIT AN ARAI® HELMET

These pages are designed only as a condensed version of your Arai® Fit Video. They should be used as a reference only after viewing the video.

THE CUSTOMER:

Unless this is your customer's very first motorcycle helmet, be prepared for them to "help" you fit them, like telling you they already know their size, etc. Politely tell them that, to you, it's not a "helmet", it's an "Energy Management System", a device whose main job is to manage the energy of an impact. In order to do its job effectively it must fit a certain way, and your job is to help determine that proper fit. This statement should change their minds and persuade them to let you do your job.

VISUAL EXAMINATION:

Begin with a visual examination of the customer's head shape. Head shape is as important to a proper fit as head size. Is the head round or long? Does the eyebrow area protrude from the forehead, or is it level with the forehead? Does the forehead protrude, is it flat, or does it slope back from the brow? Is the back of the head "pointed" or flat? Does the customer have a lot of hair, or little or none? Are the cheeks full, or even with the facial structure, or sunken? (As the Arai® video explains, some customers – especially those who wear helmets that are too large – have full faces, and can make the mistake of wearing helmets that fit their face instead of their head.)

THE MEASUREMENT:

Measuring the customer's head is the starting point for the sizing procedure. Due to varying shapes, heads that are apparently the same size when measured by a tape may not necessarily fit the same size helmet. You are trying to find the longest distance around the customer's head, at eyebrow level, above the ears. It may require several different attempts to establish the longest possible measurement, but it is absolutely essential to getting the right fit.

NOTE: Be sure to use an accurate measuring device that shows inches (in) and centimeters (cm). They are obtainable at any fabric store or order 81-0128 for Arai's measuring tape.

TRYING ON THE HELMET:

- 1 First, have the customer grab the helmet by the chin straps, with the front of the helmet facing him and the top of the helmet facing down.
- 2 He should place the thumbs on the inside surface of the straps and balance the helmet with his index fingers.
- 3 Then, spreading the helmet apart by the straps, have him slip the helmet down over the head. This may take a bit of practice and extra instruction, so pay particular attention to this step.

If you see that the helmet slides down on his head with little or no resistance, you have your first indication that it may be too large. Obviously, if it will not slide down over the head at all it is too small. Many people unfamiliar with proper helmet fit are reluctant to pull down if they meet resistance as the helmet goes on. Only if the helmet is impossible to put on should you move up to the next size larger, since helmets that go on snug generally fit very well once they are all the way on. Remember, most people left to their own devices will select a helmet that is too large for them. The eyes should be approximately in the center of the eye port with the top edge of the liner padding just above the eyebrows.

CHECKING HORIZONTAL AND VERTICAL MOVEMENT:

While the customer is wearing the helmet, look carefully at the way it fits. Check to see if the cheek pads are in contact with the cheeks. Is there excess pressure on the cheeks? In most Arai® models the cheek pads/earcups can be removed to verify the fit around the crown of the head if necessary, and replaced with thicker or thinner units to fit the face better. If there is a problem in the fit around the facial areas, you should consider completely removing the cheek pads, and then fit alternate cheek pad thickness until the proper comfort level is achieved. You may choose, in the case of a customer with a particularly broad facial structure, to remove the cheek pad set completely to get their head into the interior of the helmet to prove that the circumference is correct. Then, address facial fit by adjusting the thickness of the cheek pads. (Obviously, as a retailer, having a selection of cheek pads in thicknesses to fit the varying models is going to be essential to this process.)

Look for gaps between the temples and the crown padding. Check the back of the helmet where the neck roll makes contact with the neck. Does it touch at all? Or is it pushing the helmet away at the rear, causing it to roll down over the eyes in front? After you have made your visual check, grab the helmet in your hands, one hand on either side, and try to rotate the helmet from side to side. Note any movement of the skin while doing this, as well as the amount of resistance to movement while the customer holds his head steady. The helmet padding should not slide easily over the skin, but should pull the skin in the direction of rotation. Next, check movement up and down, again noting skin movement and resistance. If there was little or no skin movement in either the vertical or horizontal tests, and/or the helmet moved very easily, the helmet is too large. A properly fitted helmet will cause the skin to move as the helmet moves, and the wearer will feel as if evenly-distributed pressure is being exerted around the head.

NOTE: Helmets are a little like boots, in that they will break-in a bit. For this reason, the best attitude to have when fitting is that the helmet should be as snug as possible, without being painful.

RETENTION CHECK:

WARNING: This test may be a little uncomfortable for the customer, but it is very important! Have the customer tightly fasten the chin strap so you can check it. After the strap has been tightly fastened, and while holding his head steady, have him reach over the top of the helmet and grab the back of the helmet's bottom edge with one or both hands. Then ask him to try to roll the helmet forward off his head. If it comes off, or comes close to coming off, it is too large or it is not the proper fit.

PRESSURE POINT CHECK:

Have him unfasten the chin strap and remove the helmet. Immediately after the helmet has been removed, observe coloration of the skin at the forehead and cheeks. A reddening of the skin in a small area may indicate a pressure point. Pressure points sometimes are not noticed by the wearer for several minutes, or even hours later. They sometimes cause headaches, and are at the least, uncomfortable. If you notice a pressure point, or the customer experienced discomfort there while wearing the helmet, it's too small or is the wrong interior shape. Before going to a larger size, have the customer try one or more of the other Arai® interior shapes in the same size to see if the pressure points are relieved.

THE ROLE OF HEAD SHAPE IN FITTING AN ARAI® HELMET

As said above, the shape of the head – the relationship between length and width – are as important as head size in properly fitting a helmet. Arai® now offers three interior fit shapes for full-face helmets, based on the following:

“Long Oval”, The traditional Arai® fit — in which the head length is distinctly narrow side-to-side, combined with a longer front to back measurement. Arai's® Long Oval shell shape is currently available in the Profile.

“Round Oval”, The transitional fit — in which the head is distinctly rounder, length and width being almost even. These shapes are typically very easy to see when you are looking at the consumer face-to-face, from eye to eye, as well as from the profile. Arai's® Round Oval shell shape is currently available in the Quantum series. (The RX-7 series has a “relaxed” Round Oval shell shape, which is not quite as pronounced as the Quantum's.)

“Intermediate Oval”, The bridge fit — a round shape, but with considerably more forehead length in it. This shape “bridges” the gap between the two previous shapes. Arai's® Intermediate, Oval shell shape is currently available in the Vector series.

Arai's® Motocross and offroad helmets as well as our three-quarter open-face helmet lines do not share the multiple-fit packages. These are built on a single-fit package that runs in the middle of the shape range.

IN CLOSING:

Arai® is widely considered to be the world's best helmet. Let's make sure the customer gets the best service possible in the fitting of their helmet, to provide them with the satisfying, trusting Arai® experience.
