Wildcard Search

In some cases you may need to search for words without providing all the letters of the word. The result will usually return a group of word entries, satisfying the predefined condition. DioDict allows you to make such queries by using the * symbol to candidate for an unknown letter or a group of letters.

For example, if you type “dic*y” you will get a list of all words in the dictionary, the first three letters of which are “dic” and the last one is “y.”
